

Red Ribbons

America's Modern Wild West

By James McGuire
Red Ribbons was inspired by A Campbell

Banks are similar to a leprechaun, as the leprechaun placed a red ribbon on every tree to hide the "Pot of Gold"; the banks red ribbons of words conceal the truth. "Mortgage, mortgage note, assignment, conveyance, transfer, Indorser, Indorsee, grantor, grantee, transferor, transferee, tangible, intangible, UCC and a host of additional words operate as the banks red ribbons."

One source, Huffington Post¹, reported that federal audits noted the banks may have violated the Civil War era, False Claims Act.

This author has to wonder if the banks learned their method of deception from the outback kangaroos of Australia. A Joey², the baby, must be really confused knowing that his dad is known by several names, "Jack, Buck or Boomer" and the mom is known as a "Jill, Flyer or Doe," and they live in groups known as "Mobs."

Remarkable, a kangaroo cannot move backwards once it has leapt beyond somewhere. In the world of violating laws, the banks have an issue; they leaped into an area where they believed the people would not look! This author was taught at a young age, "Look before you Leap."

There are many pro bank law firms attempting to red ribbon the truth from the people, law enforcement and the courts, but the number of ribbon removers is increasing exponential on a daily basis.

Buzzards' will prey upon a dead carcass, the banks prey upon the living.
Both will puke on you if confronted!
